EXPLANATORY NOTE

The fundamental constitutional policy of education is that it is the duty of the State to make quality education available while the same time affordable to as large a segment of the population as possible. Further, it is the fundamental democratic policy that students should be able to go to schools of their choice, whether public or private.<sup>1</sup> This policy is summed up in Article XIV, Section 1: "The State shall protect and promote the right of all citizens to quality education at all levels of education and shall take appropriate steps to make education accessible to all."

It is a known fact, however that quality education is a rare commodity in the Philippines and that the State itself is not able to maintain mass quality education. Much less is the State able to give subsidy to private schools which much therefore rely on their income to support their operations. The Constitutional Commission therefore found it necessary to at least provide for a significant tax relief to private educational institutions, whether non-stock, non-profit or proprietary schools, colleges and universities.

As a result of the aforementioned thrust, Art. XIV, Sec. 4(3) of the 1987 Constitution provides that "(a)ll revenues and assets of non-stock, non-profit educational institutions used actually, directly, and exclusively for educational purposes shall exempt from taxes duties. Upon the dissolution or cessation of the corporate existence of such institutions, their assets shall be disposed of in the manner provided by law. Likewise, proprietary educational institutions, including those cooperatively owned, may likewise be entitled to such exemptions, subject to the limitations provided by law, including restrictions on dividends and provisions for reinvestment."

The constitutional provision thus has a threefold rationale. It is intended to (1) preserve the democratic choice of students; (2) enable educational institutions to improve their quality; and (3) make quality education affordable to students.

These points were emphasized during the deliberations of the 1986 Constitutional Commission where Commissioners Gascon, Nollado, Bacani and Ople highlighted the need to grant tax exemptions to educational institutions, not only to keep them financially viable but also to make education truly affordable and available to a greater number of Filipinos.

Clearly, even during the drafting of the 1987 Constitution, the problems of private educational institutions, whether non-stock, non-profit or proprietary schools, colleges and universities have already been highlighted and as a result of said realization, several Constitutional provisions have been formulated providing financial support through tax exemptions.

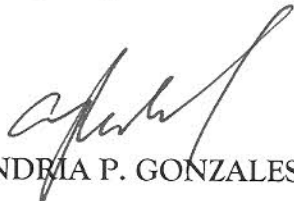

However, the Department of Finance issued Department Order No. 137-87 dated December 16, 1987 outlining the rules and regulations for educational institutions to avail of the subject constitutional tax exemption. This department order provided that in order to avail of the exemption, all revenues and assets aside from being actually, directly and exclusively used for educational purposes must also be derived in pursuance of their primary purpose.

As a result of the above department order, the constitutional tax exemption granted to educational institutions, whether non-stock, non-profit or proprietary schools, colleges and universities pursuant to the Constitution has weakened, diluted and denied. This should not be the case because Article XIV, Sec. 4(3) does not take into account how these assets and revenues are sourced. They could be derived from donations, school operations and other modes of income generation. There is nothing in the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention pertaining to the manner of acquiring these assets and revenues given any relevance.

Moreover, the mandate of the Constitution to likewise entitle proprietary educational institutions, including those cooperatively owned, to such exemption has not been made operative even after the 22 years from the effectivity of the 1987 Constitution which necessitates the passing of an enabling legislation that should have been done a long time ago.

There is therefore the need for a law to be enacted to strengthen and recognize constitutional tax exemption granted to non-stock, non-profit educational institutions pursuant to Art. XIV, Sec. 4(3) of the 1987 Constitution and to extend the same to, subject to the limitations provided in this proposed legislation, to proprietary schools, colleges and universities, by amending Sec. 27(B) and Sec. 30 (H) of the National Internal Revenue Code of the Philippines.

In view of the foregoing, the passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
