EXPLANATORY NOTE

With the growing public concerns regarding the impact of geologic hazards to the structural integrity of infrastructures in this country, be it residential houses or commercial buildings, a more detailed review of the National Building Code is in order.

However, an unreliable source and/or evidence suggests that the focus on these infrastructures should start with the false issuance of building permits, clearances, certificates or certifications awarded to the contractor by government building officials prior to the actual construction of the structure – this gives the residents or tenants a false sense of safety through proper and legal documents and less on the structure itself.

For the safety and interest of the public, the urgency of this bill should be elaborated and is deserving of urgent consideration and approval.
