EXPLANATORY NOTE

The traffic situation in Metro Manila has reached an alarming scale that it has become a national disaster. The country loses P2.4 billion in daily potential income due to traffic congestion that uses up time that could have been devoted to productive pursuits.

However foreboding the situation is, it is not like we are at the mercy of the traffic blight. There are solutions readily available and there is a basic algorithm for its remedy.

It would take a strong political will to prescribe certain measures necessary and proper to effectively address the chronic problem. It would take behavioral change and social engineering to adopt and uphold the traffic measures. It takes a little paradigm shift and a bit of going out of the comfort zone in order to set forth the parameters that lend themselves to the long-term solution.

This emergency measure seeks to stave off all other emergencies in the future. It would specifically empower the Chief Executive, as allowable under the Constitution, to:

1. enter into direct agreements with contractors for the construction, repair or maintenance of crucial infrastructure and projects subject to certain conditions
2. reorganize MMDA into a super body and delegate his powers to it as the office of primary responsibility with all other land and mass transportation offices being subsumed under it
3. institute state-of-the-art traffic mitigating measures
4. abolish or create offices as he deems expedient and as far as it is constitutional
5. realign existing funds for the purpose of funding certain traffic projects
6. authorize personnel from different agencies to assist in traffic mitigation
7. issue an Executive Order creating the Metro Manila Traffic & Transportation Task Force having control and supervision over traffic-related offices, such as LTFRB, LTO, PNP, LGUs, etc.

Desperate times call for desperate measures and Congress would do well to seek the immediate passage of this proposed bill.
