EXPLANATORY NOTE

The 1987 Constitution mandates the State "to protect and promote the right of all citizens to quality education at all levels and to take appropriate steps to make education accessible to all." (Art XIV Sec 1).

Various international instruments, such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to which the Philippines is a signatory, have also declared education as a right and not just a privilege. Hence, the country is duty-bound to provide free, quality, and accessible education.

However, considering the rising cost of education, especially college education, more and more high school graduates find it impossible to enroll in college or drop out and fail to earn a degree.

Data from the Commission on Higher Education (CHED) showed that enrollees in higher education institutions (HEIs) from 2001 to the present have reached 2.56 million, but the dropout rate reached an alarming 83.7 percent. This means that the country is producing 2.13-million college dropouts annually.

CHED records also showed that enrollment in higher education has not been encouraging as it slowed down from 1999 to 2002, and then dropped gradually starting 2002 to 2003, with negative 0.8 percent growth in 2004-2005 for both public and private schools. Except for the big jump in 1998-1999, enrollment has been sliding down, thereafter. Moreover, higher education enrollment even in state universities and colleges shows a decelerating trend, weakening to negative 1.2 percent growth in 2004-2005, despite the lower cost of public education. In the case of private schools, the decline started as early as 2002.

Based on the Commission's 2008 data, out of 100 Grade 1 pupils, only 66 finish Grade 6 and only 58 of them enroll in first year high school. Of the 58, only 43 finish high school. However, only 23 of the 43 who finished high school enroll in college and only 14 of the 23 eventually graduate from college.

Also disturbing is the National Statistics and Coordination Board (NSCB) data on the ratio of graduates to enrollment for higher education, which stands at 16 to less than 18 percent from 1994 to 2005. In the past 10 years, the NSCB reported that the total number of college graduates increased by an average of only 2.9 percent. The number of graduates also increased to only 481,862 in Academic Year 2009-2010 from 363,640 in AY 2000-2001.

Considering that more than 26.5 percent or 3.8 million Filipino families are living below the poverty line, as reported by the NSCB 2009 Poverty Statistics and released in February 2011, access to tertiary education for bright and deserving children of these families would be almost impossible, especially if they do not have the means to pay even for an entrance examination, which is the initial step towards admission to a college degree program.

Thus, this bill aims to ensure that poor but deserving high school graduates are given equal opportunities in applying for college admission to higher education institutions by removing the first hindrance at the entry level, such as the prohibitive cost of entrance examinations.

In view of the foregoing reasons, immediate approval of this measure is earnestly sought.
