EXPLANATORY NOTE

There is nothing to behold when a person looks at onions. It is a simple vegetable crop that is easy to overlook and disregard. Realistically, though, it can be a source of development and productivity for our country. Better yet, it can even be a source of pride for the nation.

A study of the farming industries in the globe will reveal that establishing an onion industry can substantially benefit a country's economy. Australia, for instance, is an established onion producer that caters to both its domestic and export markets. Other countries with farming industries have relatively delved into onion production as well.

The Philippines, with all its farming background and setting can easily turn into a respectable onion producing country. However, a comprehensive study from the initial to the final stages of onion production has yet to be put forth, if any, or altered to attune to modern conditions in case an underperforming onion industry in the country beckons.

The bill proposing to create the Philippine Onion Research Institute is the vehicle which will catapult the country's onion industry into a more progressive entity. An industry capable of serving the domestic and international markets, bringing with it much-needed revenue, thus, considerably affecting the lives of Filipinos in the process.

The bill also aspires to establish and operate one central experiment station which will undertake extensive research in onion culture and production such as, but not limited to, feasibility studies on merchandising onion farms, for example. The institute shall be placed under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture (DA) for the purpose of employing the expertise of said agency and to assure the successful implementation of the same. The DA as an administrative agency of the government is comprised by experts in a specific field of specialization under its jurisdiction. Hence, the decision to place the aforesaid establishment under the supervision of the said agency certainly augurs well for the proposed bill.

The bill, in detail, intends to conduct all kinds of research work for the onion industry; aiming to discover and introduce processes that will improve productivity with such efficiency in all aspects of production. Moreover, the bill aims to establish and maintain a sustainable and balanced relation between production and consumption of onions in the domestic and foreign markets in the process. All to be done at a projected reduction of cost completing the metamorphosis of the country's onion industry.

In view of the foregoing, immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.

HON. ESTRELLITA B. SUANSING
1st District, Nueva Ecija
