EXPLANATORY NOTE

The State is duty-bound to give the common man a relief from the barrage of problems he encounters day to day, and support for his obligations to himself, his family, and society. One important, nay, critical social issue that constantly faces each of us that can never be set aside is health. Yet, it is quite sad that the national budget for health grows proportionately smaller each year, while the amount set aside for debt servicing steadily grows.

Priority must be given to the health of its citizens in any government's agenda if it is to build a prosperous nation. Healthy citizens contribute more to the gross national product than a sickly labor force that spends more time in sickbay than contributing to productivity.

This bill seeks to enact this line of thinking by allowing taxpayers to deduct expenses incurred for their health problems from their gross income. In this manner, the health benefits that the State is having a hard time to provide due to its limited resources, will be indirectly met through this proposed measure.

In view of the urgency of this measure, its passage is earnestly requested.
