House Bill No. 4322

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Philippines is regularly hit by typhoons all year round. All throughout these years, we are witnesses to the extent of devastation these typhoons and other natural calamities can cause to our nation. Just a year ago, typhoon Yolanda left hundreds of our fellow Filipinos homeless and thousands of them dead. It took a considerable number of months before the whole affected community regained an ounce of strength to start recovering. During a state of calamity, every Filipino family becomes vulnerable to countless problems entailed a strong typhoon and/or other natural disasters. Each person needs to start from scratch to get back a little of what they used to have.

In a state of calamity, it is therefore understandable for those affected people to prioritize obligations and responsibilities one by one. The need to eat and find shelter after a typhoon or an earthquake wiped out everything a person or a family has, is of course always the main concern. Then the other responsibilities follow after that.

During these moments, it is hard enough for the head of the family, or a person living alone, to recover from their loss. And it is the obligation of the State to help each and every one affected by such calamities and to lessen their burdens as much as possible.

One of the ways this can be done is to allow the affected people and/or families a grace period for paying up utility bills until such time that the situation has stabilized in the areas hit by such calamities.

Through this measure, the victims of typhoons and other fortuitous events will be able to focus on securing their basic and primary needs first before anything else. They will not have to worry about the due bills which they have to pay and so they can make use of their money, or what's remaining thereof- wisely.
