EXPLANATORY NOTE

Hybrid rice -- a type which has been bred from two different parents and can outyield other rice varieties -- is a key technology for the country's rice producers to meet the demand for the staple food at home and abroad. Hybrid rice closes yield gaps evident in many areas, and raises yield potential, which means that farmers can earn higher incomes and consumers may see more affordable rice products on the market.

But for this to happen, greater support must be given to the seed research and production that can create better products such as these hybrid seeds. Despite the passage of Republic Act No. 3708 otherwise known as the "Seeds Industry Development Act of 1992", there is still a need to promote comprehensive quality seed production to farmers and farmer organizations by developing and propagating quality seeds for them.

This bill -- filed as a counterpart of Senate Bill No. 322 with the support of its author, Senator Cynthia Villar -- will require the National Government to undertake a comprehensive program focused on the production of hybrid and other quality seeds at a subsidized cost, as well as encouraging farmers to intensify their efforts in increasing farm productivity.
