EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Philippine Merchant Marine Academy (PMMA) is the only government maritime higher education institution tasked to produce merchant marine officers. It has been in existence for 200 years now and has produced graduates such as merchant marine officers who continue to dominate in the world fleet as well become executives in manning and shipping agencies.

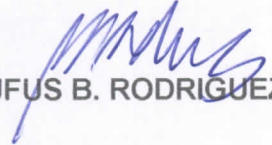

There are about 1.6 million seafarers in the international labour market. Of this number, 30% are Filipino seafarers who operate the world's merchant fleet which earned the Philippines its title as the manning capital of the world. Lately, however, China has overtaken the Philippines as number one provider of officers to the world fleet while the Philippines continue to be the number one provider of ratings. The challenge now is how the Philippines can regain its position as the number one provider of merchant marine officers. It must be able to provide the shipping sector with highly qualified merchant marine officers.

With this, it is about time for the PMMA's expansion to the whole country through the establishment of a campus in the Visayas and Mindanao. Expansion in Visayas and Mindanao will make free quality maritime education accessible to people with less opportunity to this kind of education. The PMMA has free tuition and other school fees as per Republic Act 10931 otherwise known as the Universal Access to Quality Tertiary Education Act.

Data for the past five years, 2015 to 2019, reveal that PMMA's reach are mostly in Luzon and very insignificant in the Visayas and Mindanao with 82% of the applicants coming from Luzon area while only 8% and 10% are from Visayas and Mindanao respectively. The low number of applicants can be attributed to the fact that the PMMA is located in Metro Manila. Further, there is quite a distance from Visayas and Mindanao to the testing centers and the lack of a strong marketing strategy that will reach even the most remote places of the country. Thus, establishing the expansion campus in these two islands will provide access to people at minimum expense since they do not have to go to Manila for the purpose. This will hopefully increase the intake of applicants and consequently the number of passers from these two areas. Likewise, having these two campuses will decongest Luzon and applicants will no longer be going to Manila if they want to study in a maritime higher education institution. Having more graduates from Visayas and Mindanao areas will help elevate the quality of life not just of the students and their families, but also their community and the region as a whole.

The Visayas particularly Eastern Visayas primarily relies on agriculture where 31.5 percent of workers are dependent on the sector. Having a PMMA Visayas Campus will open job opportunities in other sectors.

In view of the foregoing, immediate approval of this measure is earnestly requested.
