EXPLANATORY NOTE

The durability and versatility of plastics, paired with its relatively low cost have made it a favourite among many companies and industries for storing and packing goods. In fact, according to the UN, since the 1950s the production of plastic has outpaced that of almost any other material. Moreover, much of the plastics produced are single-use ones, which are meant to be thrown away after first usage. A bulk of plastic waste is generated in Asia, while the United States, Japan, and the European Union are the world's largest producers of plastic packaging waste per capita.

Most plastics do not biodegrade, rather they gradually break down into microplastics polluting the soil and bodies of water. It also has inimical effects to humans and wildlife. Currently, only 9% of the more or less 9 billion tons of plastics produced has been recycled. Most of the world's plastic wastes are left to litter landfills, dumps, and worse, the environment. This ceaseless proliferation of plastic waste is indicative of our increasing inability to cope with this crisis, which if left unchecked, will lead to the ballooning of our plastic wastes to a whopping 12 billion tons by year 2050.

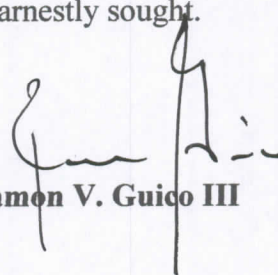

In 2017, Greenpeace revealed that the Philippines is the third-worst plastic polluter of oceans, behind only China and Indonesia. Considered as a "sachet economy" due to a large number of poor Filipinos pushed to buy cheap goods in small quantities, the Philippines have contributed to about 1.88 million tons of mismanaged plastic waste. Not only does the country's plastic waste pollute the world's oceans, it has also degraded our very own bodies of water. As a result, floods have been more severe, diseases continue to proliferate at an alarming rate, and our ecosystem is teetering on the brink of collapse.

To combat this problem, an increasing number of LGUs have initiated a ban on single-use plastics to varying effects. Spill-overs from neighboring communities who do not adopt the same policies are a common problem. To ensure that the reduction and hopefully, total eradication of plastic waste is effectively implemented, a uniform national policy banning single-use plastics must be instituted. Fortunately, Filipinos are becoming more supportive of a single-use plastic ban as evidenced by a recent SWS survey revealing that 7 out of 10 Filipinos support such measure, which effectively gives Congress a rallying cry—if it can muster enough political will to enact such reforms.

An outright ban on all single-use plastics, however is difficult to achieve. The dependence of many companies, industries, and people on plastic materials requires a gradual process of reduction and elimination. If a nationwide ban on single-use plastics is to succeed, it must be backed by rigorous research, availability of cheap alternatives, support for the transition of industries, consistent and inclusive deliberations, and incentives for compliant industries among many others. As such, under this Act, a multi-stakeholder committee shall be created to facilitate the country's transition towards a reasonable and effective ban on single-use plastics.

As representatives of our people, we have a Constitutional, moral, and intellectual obligation to proceed with great haste on this measure. As such, immediate passage of this bill is earnestly sought.
