EXPLANATORY NOTE

Education is given utmost importance in the 1987 Constitution. Article II, Section 17 of the Constitution provides that:

The State shall give priority to education, science and technology, arts, culture, and sports to foster patriotism and nationalism, accelerate social progress, and promote total human liberation and development.

This is reinforced in Article XIV, Section 2 (1), which provides that the State shall:

Establish, maintain, and support a complete, adequate, and integrated system of education relevant to the needs of the people and society;

Notwithstanding these constitutional provisions, the country still faces a steep challenge in improving the quality of education. In addressing this issue, we have to recognize the important role of public school teachers in making quality education a reality. These teachers are the ones who are primarily responsible for the education of students. They are manning the frontlines, educating the students day in, day out, whatever the weather condition may be. Moreover, the sacrifices of our teachers cannot be overemphasized. In addition to using personal funds to provide for teaching materials, they face varied difficulties like security problems, poor infrastructure, and inadequate and often delayed salary.

This measure recognizes the hardwork and effort of our public school teachers by giving an additional incentive at the end of the school year. If private corporations are able to give 14th or even 15th month bonuses to their employees, there should be no reason why the government would not be able to provide additional incentives and benefits to public school teachers. It is only fitting that the government address the inadequate compensation received by public school teachers vis-a-vis their private sector counterparts.
